Buddha Jayanti, also known as Buddha Purnima, is a sacred festival that commemorates the birth, enlightenment, and death (Mahaparinirvana) of Lord Buddha. Celebrated by Buddhists around the world—especially in countries like Nepal, India, Sri Lanka, and Bhutan—the festival typically falls on a full moon in Baisakh (April or May). Devotees visit monasteries, offer prayers, light lamps, and engage in acts of kindness and charity to honor Buddha’s teachings of peace, compassion, and wisdom.

Ubhauri is a significant festival celebrated by the Kirat community in Nepal, particularly by the Rai, Limbu, and other Kirati ethnic groups. It marks the seasonal migration of people and livestock from the lowlands to the highlands during the onset of the summer farming season. Observed in the month of Baisakh (April-May), Ubhauri is a time to honor nature and ancestral spirits through rituals, offerings, and traditional dances like the Sakela. The festival symbolizes gratitude for past harvests and prayers for a bountiful new season.

Dashain
Samana Maharjan, 5-B2

Dashain
Suveera Thapa, 4-B2

Dashain is the longest and most significant Hindu festival in Nepal, celebrated for 15 days, usually in Ashwin or Kartik (September or October). It commemorates the victory of Goddess Durga over the demon Mahishasura, symbolizing the triumph of good over evil. Families across the country reunite, clean and decorate their homes, and offer prayers and animal sacrifices to the goddess. Elders place tika (a mixture of yogurt, rice, and vermillion) and jamara (barley shoots) on the foreheads of younger family members as blessings for health, prosperity, and success. The festival is marked by joy, feasting, new clothes, and a deep sense of cultural and familial bonding.
